CAMPBELL, SANTA CLARA COUNTY, CALIFORNIA

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1915

The family of the "Rubiacea" to which the genus Coffee belongs is one of the largest and most varied of the plant families.

The blossoms are starry flowers borne on short stems, pure white and slightly resemble a single tuberosc. After the flowers, come little green fruits which in six or seven months develop into red coffee beans.

The yield varies greatly from 200 lbs. per acre to 17 lbs. per tree.

But everybody likes a good cup of Coffee. That is what you will have when you try some of our Banquet Blend at 35c or 3lbs. for $1.00.

Banquet Tea: Japan, English Breakfast, Colon, 25c and 50c packages.

Are You Encouraging Thrift In Your Children?

A practice fast gaining in popularity with thoughtful parents is that of starting a Savings Account for their children. Such accounts can be opened in the child's name or in the parent's name "in trust" for the child.

The wisdom of this is evident. The child is encouraged to save, and deposits made regularly quickly accumulate to a material sum. We solicit accounts of this nature and pay interest at 4 per cent per annum, compounded semi-annually.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Donaldson are among the many on Sunnyside who have been suffering with gripe and think a change may help them. They hope to be able to visit their son at Esparto, Cal., the first of the month. He writes very interesting letters about his alfalfa and other crops raised there, especially rice. Says many people pass by to see it growing and thinks there will be several thousand acres planted next year around that part of the county. They have plenty of water for irrigating so the crops need not suffer for lack of moisture.

Reception

The M. E. church parlors were comfortably filled Friday evening with members and friends gathered to express their pleasure to Rev. and Mrs. Lloyd that they were to remain with them another year.

S. G. Rodeck spoke on behalf of the official board, and F. Graves for the Sunday-school. Rev. Lloyd responding in a happy vein, interspersed with a few bits of humor. Mrs. Allison expressed the appreciation and good-will of the Ladies' Aid for Mrs. Lloyd's presence and help in the work of the church, to which she responded in a similar strain.

Musical numbers were given by a quartet, Messrs. Cramer, Kammerer, Graves and Herrington. The program was followed by a social hour and refreshments.

Exhibits Good

Santa Clara county is exhibiting in both the Palace of Mines and The Palace of Food Products at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. This county is one of the few which are exhibiting in practically every palace of the Exposition as well as maintaining a magnificent display section in the California building.

Santa Clara county is not noted as a mining district but it is noted for its great quicksilver mine called the New Almaden. This mine is one of the richest of its kind in the world and has produced great wealth. In the Palace of Mines and Metallurgy Santa Clara County has entered samples of quicksilver from the New Almaden. Manganese from the manganese properties is also on display in this palace. The Rogers' marble exhibit is attracting much attention.

In the Food products palace Santa Clara county is exhibiting a large number of mineral and spring waters in which the county abounds. Fruits or candied peaches, apricots, pears, plums, oranges and figs dipped in chocolate and nut meats are also being exhibited from this county.

One of the unique exhibits of the Palace of Food Products has been supplied by Santa Clara county in the shape of fig prune cereals which take the place of coffee without inflicting the alleged injurious results of coffee.

October Party

Hallowe'en furnished the theme for entertainment and decorations for the October Birthday Social held Friday evening at the Congregational church.

The first number was a hunt for hidden nuts, which were soon a thing of the past. Mrs. Shaw read a number of children's letters received by their favorite poet, James Whitcomb Riley, with some of his replies, and a few selections from his verses. October is his birth month and all know of the recent nation-wide observance of the day.

"Nuts to crack" were given out and the "Black Cat" solved them. All were good, a few being personal as, "Why does Mr. Aikinson have to be so careful what he does?" "Because he has so many Searchlights turned on him."

The table was gay with orange streamers, hung from a Jack-O-Lantern, and witches and black cats were out in numbers. Each streamer ended at one of the places fastened to a walnut which held a fortune.

Apples and ginger-bread were served, with individual pumpkin pies for the October guests.

Anniversary Celebrated

Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Merrill celebrated their 10th anniversary last Thursday evening with a party for several of their friends. Three tables of "Hearts" were played, Mrs. Russell Rucker of San Jose, having the low score and Mrs. Christy carrying off the consolation prize.

"Scotch Wood-cock" was prepared in the chafing dish and served on crackers, sandwiches, olives and coffee completing the menu.

Mr. and Mrs. Merrill were given a combination kettle of aluminum ware, the modern "tin."

PERFECT COFFEE POT

One That Is Guaranteed Not to Boil Over.

Ingenious Invention for Which Housewives Will Be Grateful Is Shown Here—Simple in Design, but Does the Work.

A coffee pot that is guaranteed not to boil over is the ingenious invention for which C. M. Smith and M. J. Slesinger of Brooklyn have a patent application pending. The pot's construction may best be understood by referring to the diagram, which shows it in longitudinal section. It consists of a main body (1 in the diagram) tapering toward a narrower neck, 1a, over which rises a flaring top, with handle, 3, and spout, 4. The spout has an inner wall, perforated with holes, 5.

Into the top goes a drum, 6, having a flange, 8, that fits tightly in the neck, 1a, and is prevented from going down too far by a rim, 7. Just above this rim the barrel is perforated with holes, 9, and opposite the spout, with smaller holes, 10. It is covered by a lid.

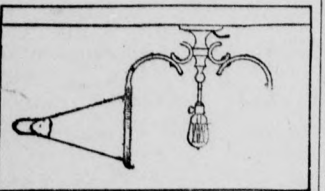

When the coffee boils it rises in the pot, but flows through the holes, 9, into the open space between the drum and the body of the pot. This instantly cools it below the boiling point and it flows back down through the holes and into the pot again. The coffee may even boil over the top, but it will be caught in the open space, 2, and will never spill. The liquid is poured in the usual way, the small perforations acting simply as a strainer.

DEVICE FOR CATCHING BUGS

Ingenious New York Man Has Thought Up a Contrivance That Should Account for Mappy Pests.

Knut George Gyllstrom, Richmond Hill, N. Y., has patented a bug catching apparatus which should be very efficacious against the innumerable little pests that inhabit the air the latter part of the summer and the early fall. Placed in a house or public building, it ought to catch most of the insects which squeeze through the screens or zip in when the door is opened.

Mr. Gyllstrom's device consists of a bright electric light to attract the insects, placed between an electric fan and a funnel-shaped bag with an insect trap at the small end. The philosophy of the invention is simple. The bugs, lured by the light, get in the path of the fan's current and are blown into the bag, where the current, of air maintained by the fan prevents them from escaping. Eventually, the bugs are driven into the trap, from which, of course, there is no escape. It is to be hoped that the patentee realizes all he hopes from his device.

Resourceful Woman.

Dr. Dudley A. Sargent of Harvard holds that sex is no bar to military service—that a woman would make as good a soldier as a man.

Doctor Sargent, at a tea in Boston, said to a group of flattered, smiling girls:

"Why shouldn't you, indeed, make as good soldiers as men? Look how resourceful you are."

"I know a young fellow who said to a girl, doubtfully:

"I consulted a palmist last evening and she told me I would marry a brunette within three months."

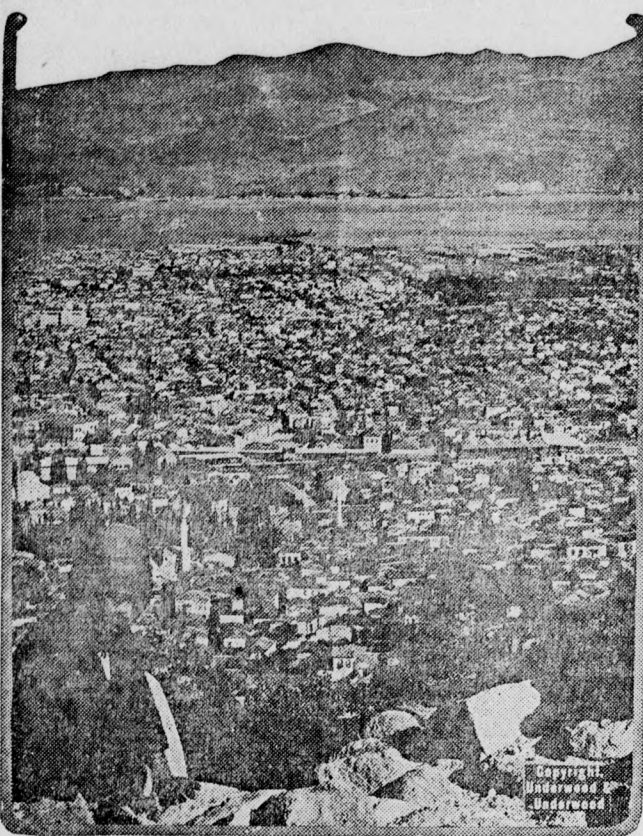

"The girl, tossing her golden head, answered with a roguish smile:

"Well, I can easily be a brunette by that time, Jack."

Jealous Bride Ended Her Life.

Jealous of her husband every time he even smiled on a baby, jealous of his office work because it took him from her side, jealous of him even if he walked alone on the street, Mrs. Adele Diaz, a pretty Spanish bride of New York city, worked herself up into such a state of mind that she committed suicide one day after finding her husband's revolver.

SMYRNA PRIZE IN SMYRNA, MANY WARS

SMYRNA AND ITS HARBOR

A LONG with the bombardment of the forts of the Dardanelles there has been going on another attack on Turkey, although the world has heard little about it. A French fleet has been bombarding Smyrna, with the result the latest dispatches must be examined to discover.

Ten times has Smyrna fallen and each time risen from ruins to renewed splendor and prosperity as the foremost city of Asia Minor. By virtue of its commanding situation at the head of a sheltered 30-mile gulf, the gateway to the interior and a terminal for caravan and railroad routes of Asia Minor, the little city clustered around the base of Mount Pagus has been a gem sought for the crown of each succeeding ruler dominating the Orient from the dawn of history.

Today—or rather six months ago—it would not be described as an Oriental city, but as a modern metropolis. With a population of 250,000, a little larger than Providence, it has become a commercial center as cosmopolitan as an American city.

Cosmopolitan City.

More than half of its people are Greeks; the rest are Turks, Jews, Armenians and people from western Europe living in outlying sections, Burnabat and Buja. The English and French colonies have played a large part in its recent commercial history.

Smyrna's export trade, in the neighborhood of $1,500,000 yearly, has been largely with Great Britain. Seven thousand steamships in a year come into the narrow roadstead of the modern quays and take on cargoes of tobacco, figs, raisins, silks, tanning and dyeing materials. Smyrna rugs and carpets, so-called, come from the interior through Smyrna.

The imports at Smyrna, cotton and linens and woollens from England and Germany chiefly, average $1,000,000 annually. Two hundred miles southwest of Constantinople, it is one of the logical way stations for traffic through the Mediterranean to the Black sea ports.

In all but its government, Smyrna is now a predominantly Christian city. A new government building and a new railroad are signs of its recent progress. The fine quays are backed by a line of good buildings. The streets are narrow, but well kept and adequate. The city boasts good schools, of which the International college is the best known, and missions of all denominations have headquarters there.

Impresses Visitors at Once.

The first view of the city that a traveler gets coming up the Gulf of Smyrna, encompassed by high hills rising from the water's edge, is one that is not forgotten. Passing numerous headlands and islands, which were in Greek times resorts for philosophers and later of pirates, the extensive cemeteries on Mount Pagus come into view and the few remains of ancient Smyrna and its citadel.

Then the mosques, minarets, cupolas, baths and little brown-roofed wooden houses rising on the terraces of the hill show up above the city itself spread along the gulf for two miles. Like many Turkish cities it is "beautiful at a distance"—more so than at close range, perhaps.

Smyrna is one of the cities which claim to be the birthplace of Homer, which is not evidence of particular distinction in the eastern Mediterranean, but it indicates the age of the city and something of its proud position. A rivulet north of the city is pointed out as the true Meles. Anaxagoras, born on an island in the outer gulf, is one of its philosophical heroes.

Tradition of City's Founding. Poetic tradition says that Smyrna was founded by an amazon of that name who had previously conquered Ephesus. The city, whatever its origin has from the beginnings of recorded history preserved an unbroken identity of name.

It came early into the possession of the Aeolians and continued in their confederacy down to 688 B. C., when it fell by an act of treachery, as cities in those days usually fell, according to their historians—into the hands of the Ionians and became the thirteenth city of the Ionic league.

Miletus, and later Ephesus, were trade rivals, but Smyrna with a superior harbor and on the direct path of commerce from Lydia, outdistanced these cities.

City Under Many Rulers.

The founder of the Lydian empire, Alyattes III, conquered Smyrna in the sixth century, B. C. and for 300 years it lost its place in the list of Greek cities. Alexander the Great, the romantic dreamer who accomplished things as king of Macedonia, succeeded in restoring the city. The idea was supposed to have been given him in a dream by Nemesis, one of the gods worshipped in the temple at Smyrna.

The city fell and flourished under the sieges and vicissitudes of Greek, Roman, Byzantine and Turkish rulers. In the Roman period it vied again with Ephesus and Pergamum for the title of the first city of Asia.

When Constantinople became the seat of the government, directing the destinies of the Asia Minor cities, Smyrna declined, trade routes changed and the city was ravaged several times.

Antiquarians have been surprised to find the few relics of antiquity that are still to be seen in Smyrna.

DEFENSE OF BOILED CABBAGE

Writer Who Appreciates the Delicacy Objects to Its Being Classed Among the Nuisances.

The decision of the supreme court of West Virginia that "the wanton and needless cooking of cabbage and sauerkraut for the purpose of annoying a neighbor is a nuisance," is very poor law so far as the cabbage is concerned, because there can be no such thing as the wanton and needless cooking of cabbage; nor would it be possible to annoy any sane person in that way. The redneck that issues from a kitchen and permeates the household during the boiling of cabbage is a great delight. The people who say mean things about it do so because cabbage is a modest vegetable and has too much self-respect to insinuate itself on the boards of the aristocrats.

We common people, whom God made so many of, and which might not be were it not so, love boiled cabbage, not only for its noble self, but for its tender memories. There is no happier reminiscence than those days when the aroma of boiled cabbage floated through the old household rubbing up against one's tender sensibilities, almost like a divine spirit, and telling one's appetite to get ready for the grand feast a-coming. People who don't have such memories as that have lived in vain.—Ohio State Journal.

Card Saved Soldier's Life.

A German lady sent a box of cigars to a soldier recently, accompanied by her calling card. The lieutenant later wrote her that the card had saved his life. One day while in the trenches he took out his notebook, and her card fell to the ground. When he bent to pick it up, shrapnel fell over the trench. He would have surely been killed had he not been in a reclining position.

MR. PLACY'S PLACE

Glimpse Into the Future Would Have Increased Joan's Interest.

"You might know," said Mrs. Granger to her daughter Joan as they sat eating a late breakfast on one summer holiday, "that there were no women in that family. If there were a Mrs. Placy she would have made the builders hurry. Men are so helpless—"

Joan and her mother had for the past nine months been watching with neighborly interest the building of the house next door. There had always been a vacant lot there. Mrs. Placy died when Mr. Placy bought the place and it was not until his children had finished their education that he had decided to build—to give up hotel life in the city for the security and quiet of the suburbs.

"Mr. Placy has a promising son," said Mrs. Granger. "They were talking about him at my bridge club yesterday. He has just finished his art in Paris and is on one of the big magazines now. They say he has a studio on the north side of the house with a skylight. I do wish we could see the house before they move in. Having no women in the family and we having no men makes it so difficult for us to see it later—especially the upstairs part." Mrs. Granger sighed mournfully.

"But I suppose you can manage so that young Mr. Placy will call," she went on. "It would be only natural—if he was a good boy and not too spoiled by his years in Paris it would be rather nice. You could have him in your evening bridge club. I don't believe anyone else would know him first and you being neighbors—I suppose he is very continental and foreign, which I think is rather better than the rough and tumble American manners. I do wish they would get in. The house is done and all that is needed is to have the lawn fixed up and they could come out from the city. It is so hard to get workmen to do anything—"

Joan had not heard the last part of her mother's breakfast monologue. She was thinking in an aimless way of young Placy and wondering what continental manners would be like at close range.

"I suppose they will always have a gardener to do everything," Mrs. Granger went on. "You must be careful, Joan, not to let them see you working in our garden patch too much. They will really think we can't afford to have things done."

Joan was watching the future home of the Placys from over the top of her coffee cup. "There is a workman out there now," she said. "He is straightening things up. Poor thing, to have to work on a holiday."

Joan watched the young man in overalls. He was carrying tollfully a pile of boards that lay on the front lawn to the back of the place and was apparently getting the lawn ready for seed. His khaki shirt was open at the throat and he had on a pair of faded overalls and occasionally he mopped his sunburned face.

"Poor thing," murmured Joan, "to have to work in this broiling sun."

Joan went about the house, doing various puttering pieces of work that would keep her on the side toward the new house, with her mind still preoccupied with the continental Mr. Placy. Meantime she would look out occasionally to see how the work was progressing and wondered whether the Placys would be able to move in next week. At twelve o'clock Joan saw the workman lay down his spade with which he had been leveling the front lawn. He produced a box of lunch that he had brought with him and retired to the coolness of the shade of the trees behind the house for his noonday meal. Joan watched him next door.

Joan hurried to the kitchen and with deft fingers prepared a cooling drink of lemons and grapefruit. "Poor thing," she thought. "Perhaps if I give him a cool drink like this he won't be tempted to go off to a saloon. He is so young and decent looking."

Then Joan got a thick glass that wouldn't matter if it broke and put the cooling beverage with ice that made it tinkle delightfully into an earthen pitcher. Then with two patty cakes that the cook had just made she hurried to the back yard to the hedge that grew between the lots.

She clapped her hands to attract the workman's attention and he jumped to his feet and ran toward her. He smiled gratefully at the sound of the ice.

"I thought you looked very hot," she said. "It is too bad to have to work on a holiday." Joan said this in her college-settlement manner, that combined perfect cordiality and yet infinite reserve.

"There wasn't anyone else to do it," replied the workman. "Besides, it isn't hard work."

"Not compared with the work you are accustomed to," said Joan, and the workman first looked surprised and then smiled knowingly.

"You don't know how much I appreciate this," he said, taking the pitcher and glass and cakes. "I will bring them back as soon as I am through."

Joan told the workman that she would be in the garden picking flowers and that when he was finished with the things he could bring them to the hedge.

When he came back she took the pitcher, drained to the dregs, and felt happy that she had been so thoroughly appreciated.

"It is a joke about that house," said the workman, after he had thanked her; "they have been so long about building it."

"Yes," said Joan, raising her eyebrows. She didn't like having a workman calling the home of the Placys a joke. "But it is very beautiful."

"Well, not exactly that. It was built more for comfort."

"Really," said Joan, more surprised at the workman than ever.

He asked her whether she had seen it and Joan—scanting a possible chance to see the upstairs and the studio of the continental Mr. Placy—asked the workman whether he had the keys.

"Yes, indeed," he said. "I will show it to you gladly."

"Oh, you needn't bother to show it to me," she said. "Just let me have the keys and I can look through it while you have gone back to your work. It must be one o'clock. I am sure the Placys will have no objection."

"Not the slightest," said the workman, laughing.

Joan started through the house and, to her annoyance, the workman followed, explaining the uses for which the various rooms—the billiard room, the music room and the other rooms on the ground floor—had been designed. She hurried away from him up to the third floor in search of the studio and he followed. Now he was not so communicative, but he stood near her and laughed a little to himself as she examined every nook and corner of the studio.

On the stairs there was a place where the boards had not been fastened and Joan started to jump it as she had done when she went up. The workman was there before she could reach it and held his hand out. "Put your hand on my shoulder and I will catch you if you fall—or will you let me carry you?" It was a perfectly courteous suggestion, but it made Joan uncomfortable. She jumped the distance without waiting to answer him, hurried down stairs, and, thanking him, hastily hurried home. She felt as if there were something unusual about the workman, and his laugh lingered in her memory. It had probably been very foolish of her to let him show her through the house, and she said nothing to her mother about it. She fairly blushed when she recalled the teasing look that he had cast her as she disappeared across the hedge.

Two weeks later, when the Placys were installed in their new house, when Joan was sitting alone in her room, the maid brought up a card on which was written, "Mr. Roderick Placy." She hurried down to him and he greeted her with easy cordiality and laughed as she returned his smile. She felt for a minute that she had met him before. They began to talk about the new house.

"I suppose you have been through it before we were in," he said.

She wondered whether he knew of her encounter with the workman. She didn't want to admit her curiosity and she didn't want to tell a lie. She hedged for a minute, and then Mr. Placy came over to her chair and looked at her closely in mock reproof.

"Don't you know me? You are the little lady who brought the cool drink to a poor workman who had to spend a holiday toiling, and you rather resented it when he offered to carry you over the loose boards in the stairs." He did not wait for Joan's reply. "We couldn't get anybody to do the work, and so I came out from the city and did it myself, and a little fairy godmother from next door came and made the day happy."

That was the beginning of the acquaintance and young Placy having been quite sure of his intentions from the first time he saw her, wasted no time. By early autumn Joan had promised to become Mrs. Placy. When she told her mother she also told her the first chapter of the romance—of her interview with the workman next door.

"And you gave him one of those heavy tumblers and the earthen pitcher," said Mrs. Granger, whose mind lingered on details. "What must he have thought?"

LAST JEST OF GREAT WRITER

Witty Remark Made by the Elder Dumas as He Lay on What Was His Deathbed.

Dumas the elder was the son of a general of Napoleon Bonaparte, who would take his soldiers by the breeches and fling them over the palisades to an assault.

Dumas inherited much of the same spirit. It is told that Dumas left Paris for the last time taking with him a single gold piece, which he solemnly laid on the mantelpiece of his room at Puy.

Toward the end his eye wandered across the sickroom to this coin, and, pointing to it, he said to his son:

"See there! Fifty years ago, when I came to Paris, I had one louis in my possession. Why am I accused of being a prodigal? I have preserved and possess it still—see, there it is!" This was Dumas' last jest.

Subtle Suggestion. "So you are still looking for an honest man."

"Of course," replied Diogenes.

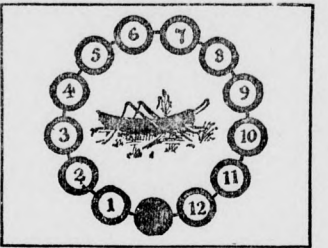

"Haven't you found one yet?"

"Certainly not. What I'm trying to do is to impress the fact that the article is so scarce that the people may as well turn to me."

POPULAR PUZZLE IN LONDON

Favorite Among Young Apprentices in Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries—How It Is Solved.

It has been suggested that the grasshopper puzzle was a great favorite among the young apprentices of the city of London in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Readers will have noticed the curious brass grasshopper on the Royal exchange. This long-loved creature escaped the fires of 1666 and 1838. The grasshopper, after his kind, was the crest of Sir Thomas Gresham, merchant grocer, who died in 1579, and from this cause it has been used as a sign by grocers in general. Unfortunately for the legend as to its origin, the puzzle was only produced so late as the year 1900. On twelve or thirteen black disks are placed numbered counters or grasshoppers. The puzzle is to make 1 to 6 change places with those numbered 7 to 12, the vacant disk being left in the same position as at present. Move one at a time in any order, either to the adjoining vacant disk or by jumping over one grasshopper, like the move in draughts. Nos. 7 to 12 can only move in the direction of a clock hand, and the others the opposite way. Note also that 1 and Grasshopper Puzzle.

12 must be left next to the vacant disk, and try to find the fewest possible moves.

The fewest possible moves in which this puzzle can be solved are 62. Here is one way of doing it. Of course, the numbers are those of the counters, and as there can never be more than one vacant disk, each play, whether it be a single move or a leap, explains itself: 12, 1, 2, 12, 11, 10, 1, 2, 3, 4, 12, 11, 10, 9, 8, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 12, 11, 10, 9, 8, 7, 12, 6, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 1, 11, 10, 9, 8, 7, 12, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 1, 10, 9, 8, 7, 12, 4, 5, 6, 1, 8, 7, 12, 6, 1, 2. Whatever may be the number of grasshoppers going each way, the square of this number, added to four times that number, added to 2, will always be the number of moves required. Thus in the above case, 36 plus 24 plus 2 equals 62.

HEIGHT AND WEIGHT OF BOYS

New York Paper Publishes Interesting Data Secured From Health Department of That City.

The health department has weighed and measured 10,000 New York school children who from July 13, 1914, to April 13, 1915, asked for working papers.

The boys of English, Irish and Scotch stock weigh, on the average, 102.44 pounds. They were the lightest of all in avoirdupois.

The boys of Italian stock weighed 104.61 pounds.

The native American boys of American-born parents weighed 105.61 pounds.

The boys of German stock weighed 106.62 pounds.

Those of Jewish stock weighed 106.32 pounds.

The Russian, Polish or Bohemian boys weighed 108.12 pounds. They were the heaviest of all.

In the matter of height the German boys were the tallest, with an average of 62.39 inches.

The native American boys of American-born parents averaged 62.23 inches, the English, Scotch or Irish 62.21, the Russian, Polish or Bohemian 61.87, the Jewish 60.93, the Italian 60.30.

The composite average height of all the girls was less than that of the boys, but they were a fraction heavier than the boys. The Russian, Polish and Bohemian girls were the tallest. The German girls were the heaviest. —New York World.

TRAINING FOR THE MUSCLES

Amusing New Stunt for Boys or Girls —Trick Must Be Done Without Bending Any of Joints.

This is an amusing new stunt for boys or girls and one that provides splendid training for the muscles. Lay a chair prone on the floor with the back up. Have a friend at the back of the chair to hold the back up, when the performance begins. Hitch the heels under the first round of the chair next the floor, with back to back of chair; stiffen the muscles, bending gradually, and touch the chair with the back of the head. This must be accomplished without bending any of the joints except those in the back and without touching the chair with the hands.

It Wasn't Necessary.

Mamma—Have you been fighting again?

Small Johnny—Not very much!

Mamma—I do not understand.

Small Johnny—Well, you see, the boy I licked wasn't much of a fighter.

Only Man Left.

"Little Lola's papa was very home-ly, and one day, after looking at him steadily for some time she said: 'Mamma, was papa the only man left when you got ready to marry?'"

W.C.T.U. Notes

The regular meeting of the W. C. T. U. was held at the home of Mrs. Whitman, Wednesday the twentieth.

A short business session was held. Among other business it was decided to have a food sale, Saturday, Nov. 6.

The meeting then adjourned in order that the remainder of the afternoon might be spent as a farewell in honor of Mrs. J. P. Lewis, who will soon leave for Nebraska.

After a pleasant social hour the guests retired to the dining-room, where a delicious supper was served by the hostess, Mrs. Whitman. The ladies were delightfully entertained at the table by recitations given by two of the oldest members of the organization, Mrs. Maria Poor and Mrs. Sadler.

A number of remembrances were presented to Mrs. Lewis with the best wishes of the Campbell Union.

Just before leaving the ladies rose and joined hands, singing, "Blest Be the Tie That Binds."

SPECIAL Election day on the proposed amendments is Tuesday, Oct. 26. The issue on which the old time political bosses are almost as a unit in fighting is No. 1, known as the non-partisan amendment. Every voter who believes in electing officials because of their fitness rather than party affiliations should make a special effort to go to the polls and vote "Yes." No. 2 on the ballot, providing for the short form non-partisan ballot should also carry.

THE Taxation Amendment No. 9 to be voted on at the special Election next Tuesday should be defeated. All matters of local taxation should be dealt with by the local communities as far as possible and the present county system seems to be quite practical. This amendment will place the power of classification and taxation in the hands of the legislature removing such power further from the people. By the present method the state board of equalization is elective, by the amendment this board is made appointive. Vote "No" on No. 9 and keep such powers in the hands of the people.

VOTE "Yes" on No. 8 on your ballot, Tuesday. This amendment permits of the present purchase of properties adjoining public holdings for future use instead of paying the exorbitant prices or high values created by the improvements formerly made at public expense. At present only properties needed for present use can be condemned for purchase.

Miss Genevieve Davis spent last week in Berkeley while seeing the Fair. Next week she will take a position on the long distance board at the San Jose Telephone Exchange.

G. W. Height and family of Selby, Mich., arrived yesterday morning after a five weeks trip across country in their auto. They are guests of their friends, Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Inman.

Mr. and Mrs. O. Strum enjoyed a pleasant surprise Friday evening when a party of relatives and friends came in to celebrate their 13th wedding anniversary. One of the features of the evening was the repetition of the marriage ceremony with three ministers present to assist.

The yearly reception to the freshman class of the High School this year took the form of a mock trial, at which Will Ludwig acted as judge, and Edgar Kennedy as clerk of court. The Freshmen were the prisoners and the execution of the sentences pronounced formed no small part of the entertainment. Henry Oliver, as Charlie Chapman, created much amusement. Refreshments completed a very jolly evening.

Mr. Crow To Speak

L. C. Crow, state president of the Washington F. E. & C. U. of America is the guest of D. M. Utter. Mr. Crow will speak at various points in the state on the work of this organization before attending the state convention in San Jose next month.

The Roosevelt Local will hold an open meeting some time next week at which Mr. Crow will speak.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized Wednesday evening when Annie E. Jorgenson and Thornton D. Webster were united in marriage, by Rev. W. H. Lloyd.

The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Jorgenson, on Williams road, in the presence of the members of the two families.

At 8:30, to the strains of the wedding march, the bridal couple took their places beneath a white dove suspended in an arch of climbing roses and chrysanthemums.

The bride was very pretty in a gown of white crepe meteor, trimmed with silk lace and pearls, carrying a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and maiden hair fern, and wearing sprays of the lilies in her hair.

Covers were laid for twenty at the wedding supper which followed.

The color scheme was yellow and white, which was carried out both in floral decorations and menu.

Mr. and Mrs. Webster are both well-known and popular as they have been active in the social affairs of Moreland, and San Jose where they were employed in the Rucker Realty Office.

After about two weeks the young people will be at home at 412 N. 14th St., San Jose, Cal.

Methodist Church Notes

Mr. Herrington has taken charge of a new class of boys in the Sunday-school, the older boys from the Loyal Knights.

Miss Ruth Lloyd has been elected by the music committee to the position of church organist, made vacant by the resignation of Mrs. Cramer.

The next League rally for the valley will be held at Palo Alto, Tuesday evening, Nov. 16th.

The ladies of the church will serve a supper Friday evening, Oct. 29th. This is also the date of the first of the League course of entertainments.

Miss Laura Dunning has charge of the league meeting Sunday evening.

Mr. Lloyd will give a Lecture-Sermon Sunday evening on the topic, Solomon's Fools. It is interesting to study ancient fables a little and then compare notes.

All friends of the churches of California will do well to vote "Yes" on Amendment No. 10 next Tuesday. Do not fail to vote.

The postponed meeting of the Sunday-school board will be held Wednesday evening at eight o'clock.

Octogenarian Passes

William Shelly passed away Thursday morning at the home of his daughter, Mrs. J. C. Ainsley. Mr. Shelly has been ill for some time and the end was not unexpected.

Deceased was born in Worcester, Wayne Co., Ohio, Feb. 15, 1833, moving from there to Kansas in 1872 and coming to California twelve years later, having lived in and near Campbell since that time.

Mr. Shelly was married at Perryville, Ohio, in 1868 to Mary C. Jones, who survives him.

He also leaves three children, Mrs. C. E. West of Coyote, Mrs. J. C. Ainsley and Warren Shelly of Campbell; three sisters, Mrs. Ella Gardiner of San Bernardino, Mrs. Rebecca Telger, Ashland, O., and Mrs. Catherine Baker, Hayesville, O.; and one brother, Joseph Shelly of Bishop, Inyo Co., Cal.

Funeral services will be held at the residence of J. C. Ainsley, Saturday at 2:30, and interment made at Oak Hill.

Mr. Shelly was well known during his more active years but as he has passed the allotted three score and ten and had been in poor health for some time, has not taken part in public affairs of recent years.

The entire community extends its sympathy to the surviving relatives.

You should see that "Rosepoint Initial" stationery at Smith's. It makes a most acceptable gift.

A Toast

The following lines were recited by Almoner S. A. Moulton at a banquet in honor of Samuel H. Wagener on his 83d birthday anniversary given by the Knight Templars and Scottish Rite Bodies at their temple in San Jose, Sept. 30.

Mr. Toastmaster

There is more to Brother Wagener Than the eye can see, a sense of profound joy

In his Soul that fathoms the beauties Of a true Christian and Masonic life.

Brother Wagener

Our lives are a mystery. How brief is its stay

Vanishing, vanishing, passing away. Life is a flower that springs in the morn'g

Fading O' fading no more to return. Our lives are vanishing. How swift is its flight

Life is the rose that fades into night. Lord, may our lives in thy service be given

Fading on earth but immortal in Heaven Like Brother Wagener's.

Teach us the worth of the vanishing time

Make every life in its purpose sublime

Virtue and innocence, Charity's dower. Merciful Father, bestow us with power

Like Brother Wagener's

Patient and strong to endure to the end

Hopeful and faithful and true to each friend

Lord, may our lives in thy service be given

Fading on earth, but immortal in Heaven Like Brother Wagener's.

Now Brothers all, if we meet in our place

And live by the rule and walk by the light that encircles our Souls

We'll all find a Lodge and a Temple of rest

Where the Great Grand Master rules over the loved and the blest

Like Brother Wagener's.

An Old Story But It's Good

This story is related by an exchange about a man who was afraid of a thunder storm and crawled into a hollow log. The thunder rolled, the rain poured down in torrents, and the log swelled up until the poor fellow was wedged in so fast he could not move. All his past sins began to pass before him and he suddenly remembered that he had not paid his newspaper subscription. It made him feel so small that he was able to crawl out of the log through a knot hole.

Have Smith print it.
